THE JOHN & MABLE RINGLING MUSEUM OF ART

STATE ART MUSEUM OF FLORIDA | FLORIDA STATE UNIVERSITY

Nuestro Vaivén (Our Sway) October 4, 2025 – March 22, 2026

*Pairing artists from across Central and South Florida with leaders of the museum's local Sarasota communities—individuals who had not previously seen themselves as belonging in the art world—this exhibition of Latin art is inspired by these Latin leaders. In fact, the leaders are completing the collaborative artistic process by designing celebrations for their distinct communities, which will take place inside the exhibition, as part of the art. In this way, Nuestro Vaivén honors Latin life itself as art and radically expands how museums listen to and serve the public.*

Sarasota, FL — The John and Mable Ringling Museum of Art (The Ringling) is pleased to announce Nuestro Vaivén (Our Sway), the Museum's first major exhibition of contemporary Latin art. This regional survey features 22 artists—representing 11 Latin American nations and 11 Florida counties from Osceola to Sarasota to Miami-Dade. Organized by New York-based independent curator Amy Rosenblum-Martin (Florida resident 1994–2000) with Sarasota-based Community Curator and Ringling Trustee Emeritus Javi Suárez, the exhibition will be on view from October 4, 2025, to March 22, 2026. At its core, Nuestro

Vaivén centers dialogue between four Latin Sarasotan community leaders from various fields and four pairs of exhibiting artists to create installations that celebrate and reflect the wide-ranging ideas and experiences of their local communities. An exhibition-within-the-exhibition will feature the work of 14 additional Latin artists, showing the broad spectrum of artmaking in Central and South Florida.

Steven High, Executive Director of The Ringling, comments: “Nuestro Vaivén presents a major and much anticipated exhibition focused on contemporary Latin art in Central and South Florida. Led by Amy Rosenblum-Martín’s unparalleled vision, the exhibition proposes a novel mode of extended engagement among the Museum, exhibiting artists, and our local communities. Her deeply collaborative curatorial process has already resulted in new lines of dialogue and new audiences visiting The Ringling for the first time.”

Since Nuestro Vaivén is rooted in conversations between the four community leaders and the two artists with whom each is paired, this unconventional exhibition-making process began with a convening at The Ringling, where the community leaders shared stories, insights, and reflections that expressed their constituents’ ideas, concerns, joys, challenges, achievements, and dreams. These meaningful talks, in turn, shaped the artists’ production, resulting in four socially engaged installations that reflect and celebrate specific Latin experiences while expanding the possibilities of what contemporary art can be and do.

As visitors find their way through the exhibition—unfolding across all seven gallery spaces in The Ringling’s Ulla R. and Arthur F. Searing Wing (Searing Wing)—they are drawn deeper into the heart of the project which features a living room-like seating area, with interactive games and a deeply effective video about the surrounding art on a television. Families and friends are encouraged to sit comfortably and play together, contributing to the community feeling that motivates the exhibition.

The pairings of community leaders and artists in four of the seven gallery spaces are:

- Diana Gonzalez, a Mexican radio personality, who has worked with artists Adrián Gómez and Emily Martinez, the former of whom records Gonzalez’s voice and features it as the audio component of a sculpture;
- Dr. Manuel Gordillo, a Peruvian doctor, who has donated scrubs from the hospital to be upcycled by artist Manuela Gonzalez into an architecturally inspired, post-minimalist installation about multifaceted healing, created with artist Yanira Collado;
- Gloria Noemy López Herrera, a Nicaraguan organizer of immigrant entrepreneurs, who has collaborated with artists Francisco Masó and Edison Peñañiel, of whom the former creates workstations for her business community to use, free of charge, within the exhibition during Museum hours—these functioning cubicles are simultaneously abstract artworks;
- and Ada Toledo, a Dominican salon owner, who is paired with two portrait artists—sculptor Rigoberto Torres and photographer Karen Arango—each of whom honor the stylist and her Latina clientele by rendering their likenesses. Torres is creating a double cast of Toledo at work with a customer in her salon, while Arango is contributing new portraits of the salon’s patrons to couple with photographs she took of the same individuals as children.

A fifth gallery and two glass alcove galleries will feature an exhibition-within-the-exhibition of paintings, sculptures, drawings, photography, and video art by fourteen additional artists: william cordova, Diana

Eusebio, Yessica Gispert, Nicario Jimenez, Tatiana Mesa Paján, Carola Miles, Glexis Novoa, Charo Oquet, Edison Peñafiel, Libbi Ponce, Gabriel Ramos, Selina Román, Destyni “desi” Swoope, Marisabela Tellería, and Juana Valdes. Within this cohort, two artists (cordova and Valdes) present work in the glass alcove galleries that look out onto and respond specifically to The Ringling’s Bayfront Gardens and Center for Asian Art, respectively. Together, the group hang, site-responsive works, and dual-artist installations highlight an extensive range of contemporary art from realism to abstraction, minimalism to maximalism, and suggest the manifold voices within the field of Latin art.

The most unique aspect of the exhibition is the community celebrations hosted by the four community leaders to complete the artists’ installations. These gatherings—designed by the community leaders for their families, friends, colleagues—serve as participatory art (life honored as art) that deepens personal and communal ties to The Ringling, and museum spaces more broadly, as welcoming, public gathering places for all.

Fostering an inviting, familiar atmosphere that encourages first-time visitors to relax, have fun, and engage comfortably with the works on view, a wide range of public programs will further enliven the exhibition, beginning with Rigoberto Torres, who will create a plaster cast of a Latin community leader during the opening celebration. Extending the exhibition beyond the gallery walls and the duration of the show, an exhibition catalog documenting the origin and development of the project, and the key partnerships as well as the art that brought it to life, will continue the conversation.

Exhibition Curator Amy Rosenblum-Martín comments: “Guided by the question ‘Who’s talking to whom?,’ Nuestro Vaivén is shaped by and created primarily for Florida’s distinct Latin communities. Developed during conversations between artists and community leaders, these new, welcoming art experiences aim to elicit deeply reflexive, personal, philosophical, and multimodal viewer participation, observations, and meaning-making. The creativity of the artists, community leaders, and public represents both the individual and collective power of local Latin communities. We’re very excited to witness how these ideas are realized by The Ringling’s constituents over time and look forward to sharing further updates as this unusual project takes shape.”

Community Curator Javi Suárez adds: “The exhibition is particularly important to me as it serves as the culmination of longtime efforts on the part of The Ringling Board of Directors and the people of Sarasota to bring someone as talented as Amy Rosenblum-Martín to curate this regional survey of Latin American art. As an expansive exhibition with over twenty artists—representing such a wide range of our Latin communities—it truly celebrates our friends, family, and neighbors who make the Sarasota community special and can now see themselves represented within the Museum.”
